Direct-to-video short film. At other times, Defoe explores the mechanistic product that results from removing the soul, itself an idea bound up with Descartes' notion of the animal as machine: His Want of Speech, assists very much to keep him just in the same State of Nature, that he was in when brought first among us; and I do not find that he makes much Improvement in any thing, nor can his Teachers, as I understand, give much Account yet, whether they think he is capable of any Instructions or no: This shews us, what a strange Machine the Body of a Man is, that any little Breach in the whole Contexture, interrupts the whole Motion; nay, which is really a miserable Testimony of our Infelicity, it goes farther, and the least Disorder of the Parts, even of the mere Apparatus, as it may be called, made by Nature for the Reception of a Soul, renders that Soul unhappily useless to itself; unable to act, unfurnished with Tools to work with, imprisoned and chained, and, in a Word, fit for nothing Defoe, 1 b: Here Defoe plays upon the Cartesian notion of the body as machine in order to show that machine acting against the soul.
