Although this technology is still innovative, significant improvements have been made. Schopenhauer believes that a person who experiences the truth of human nature from a moral perspective - who appreciates how spatial and temporal forms of knowledge generate a constant passing away, continual suffering, vain striving and inner tension - will be so repulsed by the human condition, and by the pointlessly striving Will of which it is a manifestation, that he or she will lose the desire to affirm the objectified human situation in any of its manifestations.
